CLOSE UP

A Classic Beauty With Talent To Spare

Domino Presley is a model, performer, director, and remains on track in becoming a trans icon of legendary proportions. Originally from Atlanta and now based on the West Coast, she and her phenomenal career have been taking the world by storm for around a decade now—and we're ecstatic that Domino is on the ManyVids platform with her stunning content.

The MV Team was fortunate enough to get together with Domino for a dazzling photoshoot and an interview! Check out the pics in this MV Close Up feature, they'll change your life! And read our Q-and-A with Domino to learn more about this unique and powerful artist, her inspirations, and her thoughts on life and her work.

How do you keep inspired and creative?

I keep my content original by not worrying about what anyone else is doing. If I think something will sell, I do it. Switch up your look every now and then or do a theme and stick with it. Editing, music...

What would you like cis people know about trans creators?

We are actually people with everyday lives. We don't need to be reminded we're trans constantly, we are very aware. If you see us out with our significant others, be respectful and keep it moving.

You don't need to tell us how you find us beautiful but "I've always been straight but..." or "I'm a straight man but..." dude, we already know! In order for it to be "gay" to be attracted to me I would need to have both the physical appearance and identify as a man... so by them saying that to us it's a backhanded way of selling us as men.

What impresses you?

Good manners, common sense, a quick wit, talent, and not being crazy.

You've created some of your own content that's inspired by horror films: What's the best horror movie you've ever seen and what's the worst horror movie you've ever seen?

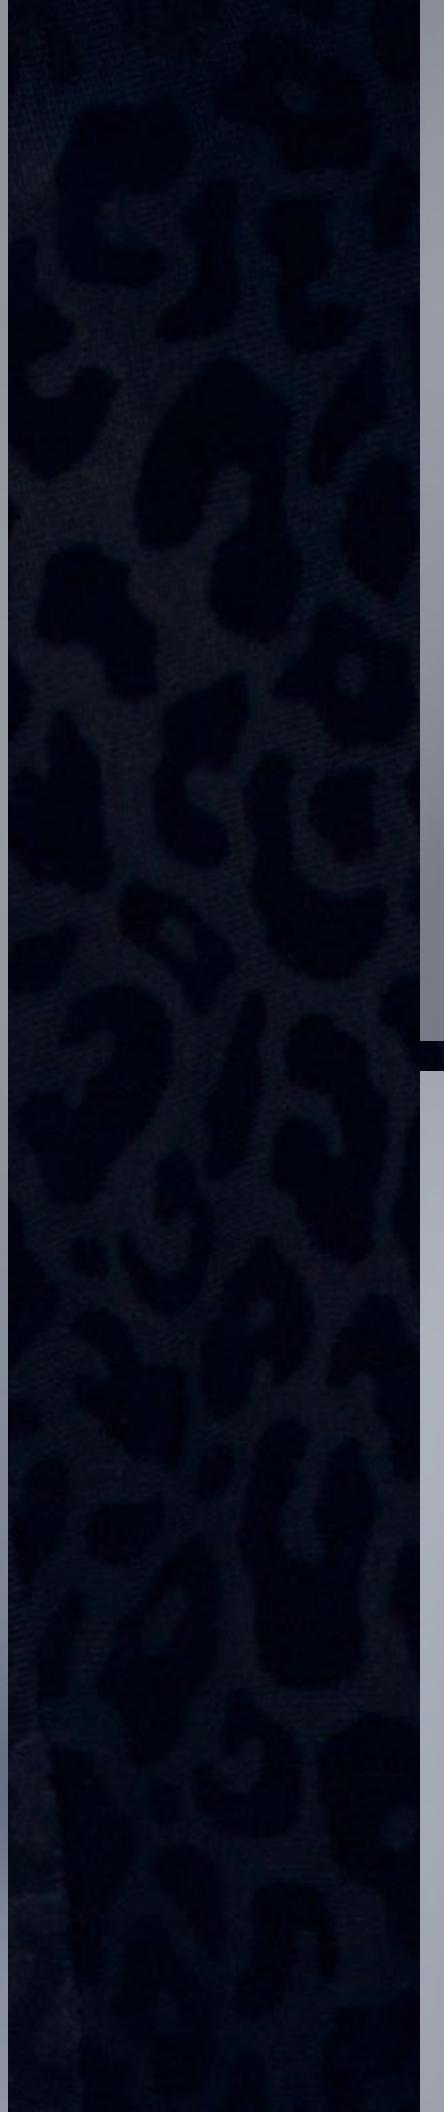

Darkness Falls scared the crap out of me as a teenager. I still have a hard time watching it now. I think it is because before growing up in Atlanta I lived in a village in Michigan and the town was similar looking. I was terrified of some woman snatching me up also.

Cabin in the Woods has been my least favorite. It was all over the place. It's great for younger people maybe or people who are easily amused.

What do you think are your greatest strengths and talents?

My personality and my modeling skills. I'm a bit kooky which makes for an entertaining time and then I've been performing and modelling for forever, so I've learned a few tricks. I'm able to get in there, deliver a great performance, and get out of there.

What tattoos do you have and what do they mean to you?

My tattoos are examples of why you should wait till you're older to get tattoos. I have two from before I was 18. One is supposed to be a panther but looks more like a monkey! And the other is a geisha that I drew on the back of the GA Graduation test and stole the last page so I could keep it.

I have a domino tattoo I got when I first moved to California and I was way too out of it for that to be a good decision. I have Sanskrit writing that says "Watched Over", a dragon I drew on my arm with a marker and had the tattoo artist go over it, a star on my foot, and another panther on the back of my neck that's similar to the monkey-looking-one because I forgot that one was there. And finally, I have a giant Capricorn mermaid on my right arm. I plan on getting a lot more but I'm not a fan of the pain the older I get.

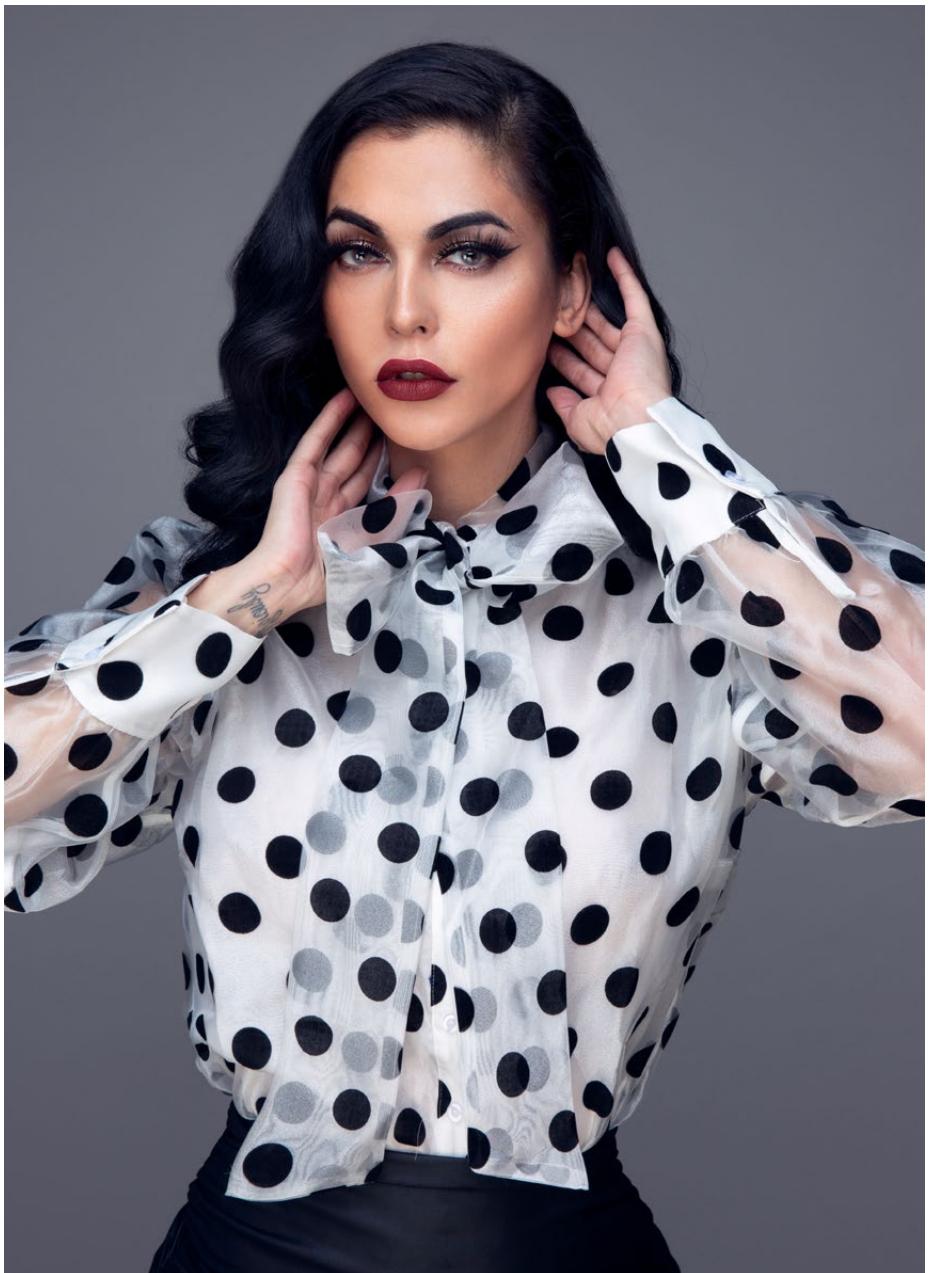

If you could add a person to Mount Rushmore who would it be?

Well, whoever is already there that a has a racist problematic history can go, and then I would add Obama because he was the best and was the first to even acknowledge trans people as people.

What's one unexpected thing that brings you pleasure?

Calling men out who are being misogynistic and putting them in their place. I like to give them sh@t to really think about and if I've ever really passionately snapped on you, it'll stick with you for life.
